

If we base all our descisions on economics then I'm affraid that the people of this country will loose out on what is best for the majority. What is good for business is not always what is best for the poeple. Discisions that corporate America make need to be based on more than the bottom line. They should consider the long term impact of there decisions and how it can effect the perception of the american public. If the public basis it's opinions on what is broadcasted and those broadcasts are not circumspective then it will lead to a lot of erronious opinions. If the media blinds the people of the truth which is more that one side of a story than they are essentially crippling the public and country as a whole. How can that bennifit people who want to make wise descisions based on sound facts. I'm affraid that it will perpetuate ignorance in our country at a time when the world needs us to make good descisions to benefit the whole. We can't continue in our short term mentality and think that our discisions won't come back around and harm us. What is best for the world is what is best for us due to the fact that we are so intertwined at this stage. I am not for allowing the companies to merge at this time. I do not see the benifit to the public. I am open to considering other perspectives.
